From the Pastor

Did you see the lead article in last week's Rhode Island Catholic? The bishop has established a committee of priests, deacons and lay people to assess the viability of maintaining the present number of parishes and make plans for a more realistic structure for the future. It goes without saying that financial viability will have a lot to do with whether or not a parish survives a general restructuring. But usually financial stability depends on the number of people willing to support the parish with their presence and involvement. I am not aware of any Roman Catholic parish that will be able to depend in the future on the income from large endowments as do many of the Episcopal parishes in our area. Our future viability will be assessed on the support of the good people of the local area who continue to give of their time and talent as well as their treasure to the work of the Lord and who think of a parish as a spiritual community to which they belong and which connects us with the Body of Christ which is his Church. I don't see why any parish should be closed just because there are not enough priests to supply a resident pastor; parishes will certainly close for lack of lay people.

I cannot thank enough those who continue to support us by their attendance at weekend Mass and who treat the Mass with respect and reverence as something important, indeed essential, to the continuance of the Catholic faith. Thanks, too, to all who so generously give of their time in service to others. God bless you for your loyalty and love!

Elsewhere in the news: This weekend and next we welcome two friars of the Order of Preachers from Providence College: Fr. Mark Nowel, Ph. D, who is Dean of Undergraduate and Graduate Studies and an associate professor of biology, and Fr. Ambrose Little, young friar who is a professor of philosophy and the director of the Angelic Warfare Confraternity, which you may ask him about when he's here for Mass.
